2 Excursion to Dakar and Gorée

Day trips to Dakar, Gorée Island, and the African Renaissance Monument. We will pick you up from your hotel at 9:00 AM and take you in an air-conditioned vehicle to the port of Dakar. A ferry to Gorée Island will be waiting for you there.

After a journey of about 20 minutes by boat, you will arrive at the small Senegalese island, a UNESCO World Heritage Site since 1978. This place, off the coast of Dakar, was one of the most important slave markets in Africa for more than three centuries.

To learn more about this tragic period in African history, you will visit the House of Slaves. This fascinating museum explains how thousands of people were sold in this terrifying place. Thankfully, it all ended in 1848 when slavery was abolished in France.

As you set off, you'll walk through the island's picturesque, narrow streets, lined with colonial houses adorned with colorful bougainvillea. These flowers bring so much joy to Gorée! The walk will also take you to the island's beach and give you a glimpse into how the locals live today.

After the visit, you will return to a ferry and go back to the port of Dakar, from where we will take you to the hotel.

4 Joal-Fadiouth (Shell Island)

Visit the amazing Shell Island with your guide Babacar from Trip Travel Senegal. Joal-Fadiouth is a commune located at the southern tip of Senegal's Petite Côte, just before the Sine Saloum. While it's commonly referred to as Joal-Fadiouth, this name actually designates two distinct villages, even though they now belong to the same commune: Joal is the one located on the mainland, while Fadiouth is an island, connected to Joal by a wooden bridge. It's the latter that is most visited by tourists, which is easy to understand: it's a unique and picturesque place that truly deserves a visit!

Joal is a village that has nothing special about it, but it is also interesting because it is one of the largest fishing ports in Senegal and is the birthplace of Léopold Sédar Senghor, the first Senegalese president.
